the
British Crown. The clapboard house in the right of the picture was built prior to 1680, and the main house with its thick brick walls laid in Flemish bond was completed in 1716.

Twice it served as an Army hospital—during the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812—and in 1781 the Virginia Militia used it as an outpost to observe the operations of the British Army at Yorktown and Gloucester Point just prior to the surrender by Cornwallis to General Washington in October of that year.

Tastefully and authentically restored by the present owners and occupants, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Pratt, formerly of Glen Cove, Long Island, the old buildings present a true picture of typical Virginia manor houses of two and one-half centuries ago.

The extensive new wing at the left of the picture was completed in 1955. Architectural details of the original building were so painstakingly followed that the entire ensemble has the appearance of having been built from a single set of plans.

OUR BULBS BLOOM

Daffodil lovers have learned from experience that good results are obtained only from top quality bulbs purchased from reputable growers. Since the same amount of attention is required by inferior bulbs, obviously it is sound economy to pay only a few pennies more for bulbs which are warranted as to quality.

Little England bulbs are produced under growing conditions similar to those in Ireland and Holland. The bulb fields are bordered on three sides by salt water from which moist breezes supply an element that seems to produce larger, healthier bulbs.

Every scientific care and precaution is taken in growing and shipping. Bulbs are not dug until after the flowers and foliage are dead; then they are cleaned and placed on trays in large storage houses where they are allowed to rest under proper atmospheric conditions for about ten weeks. When shipping begins early in September they are packaged in a manner to preclude any possibility of damage.

A REWARDING HOBBY

There are many reasons why thousands of home gardeners consider daffodils their favorite flowers, principal of which is their bravery. Earliest harbingers of Spring, year after year they bring advance notice that another Winter is ending.

Other reasons they are preferred include—a wide choice of colors and color combinations, the delicate fragrance of some varieties, their long blooming proclivity, their lasting quality as cut flowers, their ability to flourish in most any kind of soil, their immunity from disease and attack by rodents, their reproduction habits (most bulbs produce another bulb each year) and the fact that new and interesting varieties are available annually.

IN THE CATALOG

On the facing page you will find the revised system for the classification of daffodils which is of interest to those who exhibit in shows. Alphabetical listing of varieties begins on Page 4. Letters and numbers appearing in front of names indicate the correct classification and an asterisk (*) means prize winner. The number printed immediately after the name of the flower signifies the approximate blooming time. The six-weeks blooming season has been divided into twelve periods, number 1 indicating the earliest bloomers and number 12 the latest.

It contains more than 700 different varieties covering all classifications, colors and color combinations, and each year the newer and more unusual varieties which have proved most popular at British and Continental shows are imported, regardless of cost.
